He did some gold fossicking around the district, especially after rain in the exposed roots of trees and in washes by the road side. N.E. Wilson (Bill) recalls a time when he and his father were hiking around the countryside, stopped to rest in a hayshed, leant against a post only to look up and see a snake curling down the post towards his head. His last address was 169 Durham St., Bathurst. He kept homing pigeons and would send them to Darwin on the train and they would fly home. His wife wouldn't the washing out on the day they were due home. He also enjoyed family photography. He died of leukaemia. He had been sent home to die and said on his death bed (sitting upright) "the Lord is my Shepherd". (source: Max Wilson)
